

Employment First Resource List

Revised May 2016

Over the past decade, the concept of Employment First has emerged in the disability field. This is the idea that employment in integrated settings within the community should be the priority service option for people with disabilities, including those with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD).. As the Employment First concept has gained traction, a multitude of documents on this topic have been created, including state legislation, policies, reports, and articles.

The State Employment Leadership Network (SELN) has developed a comprehensive listing of these documents as a resource to policymakers, advocates, and researchers. A primary emphasis with this list is identifying legislation, regulations, and policy directives implementing Employment First policies.

In compiling this list, the SELN has defined an Employment First policy as an official directive from a state government agency stating that employment in the community (in the general workforce) is the first and primary option for individuals with disabilities.. Use of the term “Employment First” has not necessarily been a requirement for including a document. Instead, the focus has been on documents that reinforce the principles of Employment First, whether that specific language is used or not.

The SELN has taken a liberal approach to defining a piece of legislation, regulation, or policy directive as an “Employment First policy.” In some cases, these policies consist of highly detailed, substantive, and specific legislation or directives. In other cases, the Employment First policy consists of an executive order that endorses integrated employment as the first and primary service option for publicly funded services, with limited specifics. There are additional cases where language has been identified within an overall policy directive that aligns with Employment First.

A Summary of the Status of Employment First

Thirty-two states have an official Employment First policy (based on legislation, policy directive, etc.). Sixteen states have passed legislation stating that integrated employment is preferred over other service options: Alaska, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Illinois, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Texas, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. The other 16 (Arkansas, Colorado, Connecticut, District of Columbia, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia) have a policy directive, executive order, or similar official policy statement, but not legislation. Some states have both legislation and a non-legislative policy directive (e.g., Maine, Mississippi, Oklahoma, Oregon, and Washington).

Nineteen state policies are cross-disability: Alaska, Arkansas, Delaware, District of Columbia, Florida, Illinois, Kansas, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Virginia, and Wyoming. The remainder of states’ policies are focused exclusively on individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities: California, Connecticut, Louisiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Missouri, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Washington. (Oklahoma's legislation is cross-disability, and its policy directive is specific to individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities.)

In addition to the 31 states with Employment First policies, the other 19 states on this list (Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin) have Employment First efforts and initiatives underway, but no official Employment First policy has been issued stating that integrated employment is the preferred service option. These states vary in their level of activity, ranging from initial expressions of interest in Employment First with limited follow-up, to robust systems change efforts. In terms of specific activities in some of these states, New York has a September 2014 executive order that mandates the development of an Employment First policy. Nevada has an executive order establishing a governor's taskforce on integrated employment. Four states (Alabama, Hawaii, Indiana, Kentucky) have proposed legislation that has not been enacted. North Dakota passed legislation creating a committee on employment of people with disabilities to support Employment First. However, this legislation does not institute Employment First as a policy, i.e., it does not specifically prioritize integrated employment over other service options.

The level of resources on this list associated with a state should not necessarily be an indicator of the state's focus on employment for people with disabilities. Some states that have not been strongly linked with Employment First have had consistently strong outcomes in terms of employment of people with disabilities. However, the emergence of Employment First as a national movement has served as a catalyst for an increased focus on employment of people with disabilities across the United States.

In the course of developing this document, the focus has been on including as many examples as possible, particularly in terms of resources from individual states. The underlying rationale for doing so is to provide an understanding of the wide range of approaches to Employment First. Inclusion of specific policies and documents on this list should in no way be viewed as an endorsement of these documents, and as noted, the Employment First legislation/policies that have been developed vary significantly in terms of the strength and clarity of their language.

The growing emphasis on Employment First has been encouraging, and provides a potential catalyst for the long-needed increase in workforce participation for individuals with disabilities. At the same time, creation of documents, reports, and policies will not result in increases in workforce participation, without a long-term commitment to actions that make the Employment First vision a reality. Setting a vision and direction is a starting point--but it must be done in conjunction with comprehensive systems change that results in shifting of resources towards integrated employment, a service system that provides consistent and high-quality employment assistance and supports, and measurement and accountability for achieving employment outcomes.

Employment First is also about more than just changing how services and supports for people with disabilities are provided. It is reflective of a fundamental cultural shift by policymakers, public officials, service systems, service providers, employers, and most importantly by individuals with disabilities themselves. This new viewpoint recognizes people with disabilities as full participants in the economic mainstream, working side by side with their fellow citizens.
